On behalf of the Zoglman Family, I would like to thank you for sharing this time with us.

We would like to thank the People who cared for my Grandmother and gave her the best quality of life possible over the last years including Her Doctors, the staffs of Memorial Hospital and St. Charles Health Campus, and the St. Joseph Parish Stephen Ministry Program and her Stephen Minister and Friend Linda Burke.

We invite everyone to join us for dinner after the funeral in the St. Joseph gymnasium and activity hall.

Theresa was born March 5, 1919 in Waterflow New Mexico. While most of us read or watch movies about the Wild West, Theresa experienced it first hand.

Her Father, L. T. Stallings, ran a store and post office across the river from the Navajo Reservation. I was always fascinated about Grandma's stories about her child hood. She was thrown off horses, saw steers run wild thru town, had older brothers work as cowboys, learned Indian customs, and saw an Indian die on her living room floor after he was shot during an altercation with an Easterner. .

She also formed a foundation for three important things in her life, Family, Faith, and Education.

She attended Sacred Heart Academy where she did well in school, learned to play several instruments, and nurture her faith from the missionary sisters and Priests. She even considered joining the religious service as a Nun. Her strong Faith remained with her thru the good times and bad until her death last week.

Family was extremely important to her. She often talked about her parents and 10 siblings. Although I never knew L.T. Stallings, or Mike or Aloysius, I felt like I knew them well from the descriptive stories she told about them. She always looked forward to reunions and the annual Stallings Christmas Party.

Due to her Father's health issues the Family decided to move back to Kentucky in 1932. Her Grandmother and Uncle remained in New Mexico. She was very close to her Grandmother and spent a great deal of time wither her. When they left Her Grandmother told her that it would be the last time she would see her on Earth, but the next time she sees her will be in Heaven. I am sure they had a good reunion last week.

Grandma talked about their trip back to Kentucky, their automobile breakdowns, and visits to cousins, attending dances at CCC camps in Oklahoma and skating. She told of 200 boys wanting to dance at the CCC camps. She experienced the historical times of the Great Depression first hand.

Returning to Kentucky her Father bought a farm across the river in Spencer County. Grandma continued her education at Mt. St. Joseph Academy where she continued to do well in school and played basketball on the St. champion basketball team.

At this time she met Ed "Bud" Zoglman whom she fell in love and married on April 19, 1938 in a double wedding with her oldest sister at St. Bernard's Church.

She loved my Grandfather and treated him like a king. He was known to be picky, but I am not sure if he was picky or spoiled by my Grandma's cooking. She made Liver sausage and potatoes, drop dumplings, roasts, Swiss steak, and dressing. She made the best homemade breads, Kuga Bread, Finnety, fudge, and pies. Nathan and Jobe will attest that she made the best breakfast, omelets, egg sandwiches, and pancakes. I see her every Saturday when I stop by Nathan's and he is fixing breakfast for William and Anna.

Besides being a terrific cook and baker she was creative and artistic in many areas. She was a talented writer and had a terrific memory. She loved history and current events and took time to teach young people. I learned of the West, Depression, World War II, Kennedy, the Space Exploration, the Vietnam War, and other history events from Grandma. Walter Cronkite was a regular visitor to her every night with the evening news. I listened to the Jasper Plymouth Classic Double Overtime State Finals on the radio with Grandma. I was in her living room when I heard Karen Carpenter, Jim Croce, and Harry Chapin died. I was in her living room when we heard the truce was made in Vietnam.

Today she would have probably received scholarships to College and become a teacher, business major, entrepreneur, lawyers, politician, banker, or writer.

For years she made candles. I was amazed at her creativity and imagination. Her candles included snowballs, Christmas Cakes, Drinks, Sodas, horses, cheese, chimneys, and anything you could imagine. She made many wedding, baptism, and First Communion candles. Often she would make candles for Christmas Gifts. Of course Ed and Joe would cut up and place bets on who had the longest wick. Grandma caught on and with her sense of humor, would fix a candle with a special long wick to shut them up and take their wagers.

Later on she made crafts that she would sell at shows and give as gifts. I know I use many of her pillows, blankets, and decorations today. Libby continues this family tradition.

Grandma also enjoyed playing cards. She was good at Euchre, Sench, and rum, but especially liked poker. She always had a little smile when she trumped her ace or went out in rum. She was a smart calculating good player. I was always amused at Grandma and Joe and Ed picking on each other during card games. They would play nickel dime poker. Of course, Grandma was always busy trying to find silver coins made before 1964. When Grandma had a good hand she would bet 50 cents or a dollar. They would remind her that it was nickel dime. She would respond, "But I have a good hand." Soon everyone played nickel dime unless you had a good hand you could bet more. She would bluff Joe and Ed stealing the pot. Once Joe called her bluff, she simply smiled and thru her hand in knowing she was caught.

Grandma liked people and liked to help those who needed a friend. She spent a lot of time volunteering at the Providence Home and on their trips. She was ahead of her time realizing what a special person Father Thad was. I am sure they were happy to see each other last week.

She did not judge people and overlooked people's shortcomings. I think she tried to find good in everyone.

She was very proud of her children and grandchildren. She loved to receive letters and pictures of their families. Her mantle was filled with pictures and leaders from her family. It was part of her living room as much as the coconut, spittoon, and her knitting materials. She was a perfect example of a Grandmother. I think every Grandchild would say that they were her favorite because when she spent time with you, she made you feel special and that you were the most important person in the world.

Although we will miss Theresa, we cannot be sad. She is back with Bud, her parents, siblings, and friends. Like her Grandmother told her 75 years ago, the next time we talk to her will be in heaven.

I still see Theresa every day. I see her intellect and interest in family traditions and history in Joe. I see her gentle, easygoing personality and love for children in Rosie. I see her interest in politics and the world, dedication to her Husband, and the love for her Grandchildren in Susie. I see her craftsmanship, musical talent, and creativity in Libby. And, I see her concern for helping the less fortunate and her sense of humor and mischief in Ed.

The greatest measurement of the achievements of a person's life is the impact and influence they made to those around them. I think we all agree that Theresa was very successful.

As we leave her this morning, let's remember the lessons she taught us,

Treat everyone with respect

Listen to and spend time with young people

Continue to learn

Help those less fortunate

Family is the most important treasure you will ever have

No matter how good or bad time get, always remember your Faith and that God, Jesus, and Mary will always be there for you…
